

Starting From Behind

Starting From Behind

Posted by Nathaniel Francis

31 Dec 2014 01:05 AM

I have finally come to the conclusion that I have been putting this off. And for too long.

The original intent of this site was to be a tool that I could share what I learn as I progressed as a web developer.

Then that though expanded into sharing what I learn in life in general.

Then I just scared myself out of writing for a LONG time.

What I've learned in this process is just how exposing it feels to put your own work and thoughts "out there".

Now, I'm not an idiot, and I realize what one Twitter connoisseur expressed: "Unless you are a celebrity, your Twitter account is like shouting in an empty room". So, it's not like I expect that these thoughts and works will be widely read or recognized. But it still seems exposing to push your own thoughts out there and that is a huge barrier that I have to get across. I know that my perspective on many of these topics is biased and if met will receive criticism. I guess so be it. Without accepting that, I can't really move forward from here.

Regardless, it feels, at this point, that I'm starting from behind. I've got a mountainous backlog of things to write, produce, and work on.

I may never actually catch up with myself.

Tags: self reflection

0 Comments

